SAVES

IN THE DAYS BEFORE BANKS, country folk often buried their money under the hearthstone, and then lit over it the log fire which was never allowed to go out. Thrifty couples in these days keep up this old rural custom by putting their savings into an Aga cooker, which also stays in night and day. Here are some of the ways in which the Aga gives solid and appreciable savings:

On Cash:

So economical is the Aga in fuel consumption that savings in fuel bills eventually cover its initial cost. Look at it this way: the Aga Model CB has a guaranteed maximum fuel consumption of $3\frac{1}{4}$ tons a year. With coke at £5.3.2 a ton this means your quarter's fuel bill is less than £4.11.0 — i.e., for a shilling a day you have constant hot water and a perfect cooking service. Compare this figure with your current fuel budget. The difference will give you your monthly saving. And the answer will set you thinking seriously.

On Work:

How much work the Aga saves! No fire lighting, no black-leading, no constant stoking or refuelling, no greasy fumes, no soot or smoke. The Aga is as good as a servant in the kitchen.

On Capital:

Since 1929 tens of thousands of far-sighted couples have installed the Aga as an investment. They have got their money back long since and their fuel savings are now tax-free income.

On Income:

The Aga CB is the only cooker and water heater which can be bought on Hire Purchase over a period of as long as five years (and is the only cooker and water heater on the market which is guaranteed for ten years). For as little as £2 a month (say 10/- a week or 1/6 a day) you can enjoy the most efficient cooker and an absolutely certain, trouble-free supply of hot water.

WE are going to be short of fuel, be it solid fuel, electricity or gas. But official opinion favours solid fuel for water heating and space heating.

The AGA CB with its single fire, cooks your meals, heats your water and warms your kitchen.

Aga owners may apply to their local Fuel Overseer for additional fuel to keep their Aga going.

Barneys

the Ideal Tobacco

may lead you to the true, deep, lasting friendship of the pipe,—one of life's simplest, yet greatest joys Gillingham, Kent.

"I feel I must write you a few lines in appreciation of "Barneys Tobacco.

"I have been trying to smoke a pipe for years, but after "a few days have had to give in. Then I had the good "fortune to strike Barneys. It is splendid, and the "flavour is much better.

"I have already recommended it to two of my friends—
"both pipe smokers of long standing—who are as "enthusiastic about it as I am."

Smokers of Barneys are of all ages and callings. Week by week, from places near and far, they write in praise of its constant charm; and grateful and proud we are to publish their spontaneous comments.

All original letters can be inspected.

TO YOUNGER SMOKERS EVERYWHERE!

In your quest for the tobacco of abiding joy, you are asked to give trial to Barneys—which has won so many friends from the recommendations of older smokers.

 'Ovaltine' Manufacturers to H.M. The King

Why Ovaltine Excels in Quality & Value

DELICIOUS 'Ovaltine' provides health-giving nourishment of the highest quality at the lowest possible price. A small tin of 'Ovaltine' costing 1/6d., makes as many as 24 cupsful! That is real economy, by any comparison.

Remember . . . 'Ovaltine' is different from all other food beverages. The differences concern the selection and proportions of its constituents, and the steps taken in the interests of quality. The 'Ovaltine' Farms were established to set the highest standards for the malt, milk and eggs used. The use of eggs in 'Ovaltine' is important, and so is its vitamin content.

It is for these reasons that 'Ovaltine' is the world's most popular food beverage. For helping to ensure fitness and energy all day, and refreshing sleep all night, there is only one 'Ovaltine'.

Prices in Gt. Britain and N. Ireland,

The good that lives on

There are so many ways of hurting a child. Lack of love and companionship, confinement, for whole days at a time, alone in a bare room — these are examples of the not-so-obvious forms of cruelty. And so, if you want to make a bequest to a really good cause, you could not find a better one than the NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN. Its business is to protect and it only prosecutes when help and advice have failed.

FACTS TO REMEMBER WHEN BUYING MATTRESSES, PILLOWS & UPHOLSTERED FURNITURE

In every cubic inch of Latex
Foam there are approximately 250,000 tiny interconnected air cells encased in pure rubber latex.

Unique Construction makes LATEX FOAM
the world's most comfortable, hygienic and durable material for Mattresses,
Pillows and Upholstery

Imagine it: a quarter of a million tiny air cells in every cubic inch!

To this multitude of air cells Latex Foam owes its deep, restful, luxurious comfort.

The fact that these cells are interconnected enables the Latex Foam to 'breathe.' With every movement of the body the cells contract and expand, keeping the mattress, pillows or upholstery air-conditioned, hygienic and dustless.

And the rubber latex which encases the air cells gives to the material that resilience which ensures great durability, true economy and a life-time of satisfaction.

It matters

MATERIALLY*

how you choose your bedding!

It is a mistake to imagine that comfort is all that matters in the choice of bedding. There is health and hygiene to consider. It is a wise plan always to see the "Curled Hair" tag on any mattress you buy — that is your safeguard.

★CURLED HAIR is a natural material which ensures hygiene, comfort and economy to a degree which no manufactured upholstery filling can match. It retains body heat but allows humidity to escape by perfect self-ventilation, is "non-rust" and odorless; does not crumble, break-up or lose its resilience and springiness in years of use and is non-inflammable. It can be re-sterilized whenever necessary. There is no other filling, however expensive, which can qualify in all these tests.

Insist on CURLED HAIR for health and hygiene

Did you feel fit and fresh

...first thing this morning

In other words, did you spend the night on a "RELYON"? To replace the energy expended during the day, you need to relax completely at night, and the following morning you will awaken, not only feeling fit and fresh, but looking it too. A "RELYON" makes all the difference — it means a night of not merely "sleep", but of complete and utter relaxation.

How like life!

HOW TRULY WE SPEAK when we say we are tied; tied by the strings of circumstances we cannot control! Duties and tasks, our home, our work, our children, even the obligations we love and would not evade—all these pull us this way and that.

No wonder if at times we find that energy flags, that small tasks need great effort, and nervous tension spoils our sleep.

At such times Milo can be a great help and benefit. In a precisely balanced formula it supplements the intake of those nutritive elements which are now known to be most beneficial in sustaining nervous and physical well-being! Milo is very easily digested, it makes a most delicious drink and, taken regularly for a few weeks, it can do you nothing but good.

Today much is known, more than ever before, about the human body, how it works, and what it needs to maintain the health and stamina which the pace and pressure of modern life demand. It is with the advantage of this knowledge that Milo is composed. Every particle of Milo is pure goodness. Indeed, there is in Milo so much that is good for you, the wonder is that it can at the same time be so very nice.

COPE'S "WHY THEY WON" Series

No. 5 Hyperbole

(Bay, 1945) Hyperion—Avenue. Hyperbole did not run as a 2-year-old, but in 1948 won twice out of 4 starts. In 1949, he was successful in 3 out of 9 races. In 1950, he had 4 wins out of 10 starts, including the Royal Hunt Cup, and Knight's Royal Stakes at Ascot, where he was also successful as a 3-year-old.

HYPERBOLE is a horse of beautiful quality, tall rather than lengthy, with a head expressive of intelligence and courage. Long quarters and good shoulders give evidence of his speed and fine stride. His proportions proclaim the miler, this being borne out by his three wins at 7 furlongs, two at 7½ furlongs and four at a mile. Hyperbole remained in training in 1951.

Paradoxical but perfectly true of those factories that are exploiting the uses of Aluminex Patent Glazing. Windows cease to exist when a wall becomes one great big window that will open to full ventilation at a single touch.

That, sir, is what Aluminex will do for your factory.

Aluminex Patent Glazing is an all aluminium glazing system that glazes acres of glass economically, efficiently and beautifully. Panes of glass are clipped into a web of extruded aluminium bars making a glass wall that withstands the toughness of an Atlantic gale. If this web of Aluminex is fitted with Teleflex gearing more than a hundred feet of it can open a factory to full ventilation at a single touch. Aluminex does indeed open up new horizons in factory design.

Let us tell you about it. You'll find us in most cities of the world.

THIS is a typical "factory" in Britain's most important industry. There are 15 million such "factories" providing the essential services without which the nation could not survive—shelter, warmth, food, light and the care of the next generation.

They employ 13 million women—the biggest labour force in the country—doing work of a most exacting kind.

We at Hoover Limited derive satisfaction from the knowledge that our electric cleaners are doing so much to relieve unnecessary domestic drudgery; and we are proud that their average retail price, ex-

We look forward to the day when, with purchase tax abolished and free supplies of raw materials available, we shall be able to maintain maximum production of both cleaners and washing machines. WORDS FOR NICHOLAS AT NINE shake out their wings, and soar and sing like birds of flashing, gleaming feathers—

peacock-blues,
Red Admiral scarlets, shimmering, silk-robe greens
fit to adorn Jade Button Mandarins;
and jewel-colours,
turquoises, topazes,
and milk-blanchd moonstones, Nicholas,
all the hues
th' imprisoning rainbow holds—words, words, words, words
O bright!
Lovely to say and sing, and beautiful to write.

There's Palimpsest—
a grand word old and stately,
to do with History, and Manor Lands,
and great possessions men once valued greatly.
There's Ortolan—which is itself a bird—and Chivalry, a noble-sounding word by which, one day, Nicholas, you will be spurred as knights were, when men's faith in words was strong.
There's Parasang—
a word to shout to stars,
and when you understand its meaning, too
as thrilling as the note of a great, bronze gong.

There's Burgundy
(a Duke, also a wine and both magnificent),
there's Damascened—
a word that goes back, Nicholas, to the line of the Crusaders; Crusaders, Nicholas, a word as well-rubbed as an ancient brass in a Cathedral (which is Norman, too, like the Crusaders). Old words shine mint-new as Basilisk does if you but learn to seek whether they come—as that one does—from Greek or Latin (like Regency), or were fetched away with silks and ginger in a bygone day from the far borders of remote Cathay, or brought with looted Ingots from the Main,

exchanged for English words by way of Spain.

There's Roc
(a word that has a hard, fierce beak) and Nightshade
(that's a dreamlike, deadly flower);
Nicholas, I could repeat words by the hour
as you do, when you fall in love with them:
oh, even the commonest of them is a gem,
like Dust, from which both you and I, Nick, spring.

R. C. SCRIVEN

AT A FAIRLY SOLEMN MUSICK

ONLY once in the course of a musical career which, imposed by tyranny and sustained by corrupt practices, endured from my sixth to my twelfth year, was I asked to perform in public upon the pianoforte. The occasion was some sort of festival, whose organizers had foreseen the lively possibility of an awkward, cough-ridden pause between Item Five ("First Aid to the Injured") and Item Six ("Robin Hood and His Merry Men"); and the idea was that I should distract the attention of the audience while Sherwood Forest was brought into being on the stage. A select committee of aunts and music-mistresses surveyed my repertoire from Czerny's Studies to the "Little Tots' Album of Pianoforte Pieces," and presented me with a short list from which I was to make a final choice according to the mood upon me at the time. This list consisted of two pieces—Weber's "Last Waltz," and Durand's "First Waltz." (It is easy to see that the committee were taking no chances.) My attitude towards these two works was influenced by my failure to associate either of the named gentlemen with the composition of the music. I saw Weber as a failing old man, limping gallantly round a ballroom with his medical advisers in close attendance and an undertaker's tout at the back door. Him I admired, but I did not wish publicly to associate myself with so macabre a situation. On the other hand, I had a fellow-feeling for Durand; we were both novices, and he had doubtless shared the emotions I was now experiencing (this was a full week before the appointed day) ere he launched himself into the whirling gaiety of the waltz.

In the event, I played neither; but by a stratagem played a piece of music which was ideally suited to the temperament of a small boy. It possessed, as will be seen, the advantage of being noisy enough to muffle the passage of Birnam Wood to Dunsinane, let alone the arrangement of the half-dozen potted plants and the meagre log which were "A Glade in Sherwood Forest."

This masterwork was called "The Battle March of Delhi," and it was a "Descriptive Piece." To enable the executant to follow the stirring events with sympathy, each section of the music bore a sub-title; and proceedings began with the announcement:—

"The Clock in the Palace of the Great Mogul Strikes Four"—thus adding to the horrors of war the discomfort of early rising. The clock was represented by four lovely rumbling chords down in the bass, molto sostenuto; and under my control the clock often struck twelve, and seldom less than eight. This was liable to make nonsense of the next sub-titles, "Daybreak"—

"Come along—there's nothing there."

a melancholy tinkling at the top of the keyboard—and "Reveille," an imitation of the martial bugle on single notes. Never, in those days, having experienced Reveille in its practical application, I performed this part with gusto, and at length. It had the desired effect of alerting both sides, for the next direction observed that "The Mutineers are Alarmed at the Approach of the British Cavalry." The cavalry (their breakfasting must have been a sketchy affair) approached in long, loping arpeggios, and the mutineers were alarmed in short, jerky arpeggios. Aid for the latter was at hand, however, for over a small cluster of sombre chords appeared the legend "Guns of the Mutineers." A little licence was clearly permissible here; British cavalry keen enough to forgo breakfast were not the men to be deterred by a stray shot or two, so I unmasked several batteries and laid down a barrage of some intensity. No doubt the composer had in mind some affair of outposts; it was not my fault that the main battle was not joined at a few minutes past four in the morning.

Eventually the cavalry withdrew, and the mutineers ceased firing, and a calmer atmosphere prevailed, under the label "Old Indian Air." "Old Indian Air" it may well have been, but to me it was familiar, in both a religious and a secular context, as "There is a Happy Land, Far, Far Away." A fleeting reputation for piety which I enjoyed for a season was perhaps attributable to my playing this over two or three times in reflective mood, while gathering my forces for the next event, which was "Trumpet Calls Troops into Order of Battle." Here again, the composer had missed his chance. The mutineers would hardly stand idly by while formal preparations for their destruction went forward; so the guns opened up again. Left-hand did guns, while right-hand called troops to order.

Having got the troops lined up, the caption said "General Wilson Orders an Immediate Attack." The composer designedly followed this exciting announcement with some fairly emphatic notation, but he did not intend the pandemonium which I got out of it. The troops swarmed to the assault in a riot of crescendo, the Guns of the Mutineers (mentioned tamely, once) did horrid execution, and, when I could get a finger free, the bugles blew on both sides. There were, originally, some twenty or thirty bars of mélée, but at my behest the battle swayed indecisively beneath the walls for about ten minutes. Wilson, according to his contemporaries a man of vacillating disposition, would have called the attack off long before I had finished!

However, in the end the British won, and the victory was celebrated by "See the Conquering Hero Comes"—a tribute, one supposes, to General Wilson—and one or two quiet tunes indicative of peace. During these, in my amended version, the noise of the pursuit (arpeggios) and the sullen resistance of isolated guns (chords) could be heard in the background, punctuated with bugle calls.

It is not, therefore, surprising that the erection of Sherwood Forest went forward unperceived (a fact I made great play with in my defence later); but against this solid gain must be set the tedious period of waiting endured by Robin Hood and his half-deafened men, a period long enough and noisy enough to drive most of their lines clean out of their heads, with disastrous consequences for which I was held to blame.

Years afterwards, reading an account of the siege of Delhi, I realized that the composer's incomplete study of military history had deprived me of a grand chance. At a crucial moment during the final assault, the Kashmir Gate was blown up.

Even now, I sigh over that lost opportunity.

A WORD ON PROMOTION

THE head of the Information Department of the Ministry for Quadrilateral Affairs laced his thin sensitive fingers together and span one thumb round the other.

"So you want to rise in the world," he said.

"Well," I began, "I feel, and my wife thinks . . ."

The brows bent, and the long thin nose twitched.

"In your case I should advise patience."

"But . . ."

"Oh, I don't mean that you've been unsatisfactory. Your waistcoats have never offended, you have learned what to say to the Resident Clerk when you are duty officer, you know the difference between démarche and décente, and you've never gone abroad for your holidays. But—there's more to it than all that.

"Look at Mandrill, now. He remained, puzzled and disconsolate, for three years as a Temporary Assistant Grade III. The handles of the drawers in his table always shone; he brushed his carpet every morning, and locked up his secret telegrams every night. He even conquered an annoying and distracting habit of cracking nuts with his teeth during conferences. But he didn't realize that everyone on the staff was doing the same thing, so to speak—that it's the ability to attract attention that counts.

"Mind you, I doubt if he'll ever get much farther. Have you ever watched him trying to cuddle the telephone receiver in the hollow between the cheek and the neck? And what about those rows of pins stuck in the lapels of his jacket? And calling everybody 'lad' at the conferences?

"Yes. Now, when I joined the staff of the department I soon discovered the importance of a personal liaison with the Organization and Maintenance Department and people like the Typing Pool.

"And I can recall with pleasure the day when the then head's chair gave way during a briefing on Article Nine of the Versailles Protocol—was it in 1919?—and I was able to produce an armchair with adjustable casters for him next morning. I moved up from Clerical Officer Grade IV to Grade III at the end of the week.

"There was the occasion, too," went on the head, leaning back and judging the balance of his chair to a hair's-breadth, his feet swinging up and round till they came to rest, light as thistledown, on his blotting-pad, "when my predecessor suddenly dried up somewhere in the middle of a statement on overall deficits. There had been some whistling from the weeklies occupying the seats near the door, and there had been signs of what would now be called, I suppose, slow clapping. But nothing out of the ordinary.

"I suddenly ran to the window—the one that looks on to Downing Street—and began to wave excitedly. It was a sufficient distraction. When we had all resumed our places, Mandrill was smoothly on his feet and already well into the recruitment of miners from Russia. Oh, yes—we had our fuel troubles in those days, too. However. The head never said anything, but I was awarded my table shortly after."

The thumbs stopped spinning, and he absently changed the date in the date-stamp with a pen nib.

"These," he wound up, "are the first steps in promotion. But I doubt if you have the imagination or the administrative ability . . ."

Punch Festival Exhibition

Until September 28 the Punch Room and an exhibition of recent original drawings are on view to readers at the Punch Office, 10 Bouverie Street, E.C.4, on every WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY and FRIDAY from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M.

READING WITHOUT TEARS

WHAT ghosts, you may reflect, will be dislodged in a few weeks when the Reading-Room of the British Museum is closed for cleaning and the readers are exiled to the unsympathetic terrain of the North Library and a couple of other alien rooms. There they hover along the spokes of that great cartwheel of benches: Gibbon, always (to quote the Duke of Gloucester) scribble, scribble, scribble at some damned thick square book; Marx and Lenin, plotting, in relays of course, the Russian revolution and the Korean war and the laws of genetics; Samuel Butler, who pronounced roundly "I keep my books at the British Museum and at Mudie's"; Verlaine and Rimbaud—how the devil did those two get tickets? Rimbaud was only eighteen anyway; Thackeray, who found there peace, love, truth, beauty, happiness for all, generous kindness for you and me, and a heart full of grateful reverence—surely the list could be prolonged almost to infinity.

Such reflections would be quite misleading, however, for all the best ghosts were exorcised when the room was last cleaned in 1907; and Gibbon, for one, who died in 1794, never saw the existing room, which was built in 1857 (when it was opened by the Archbishop of Canterbury with a ceremonial breakfast-party).

Lenin alone may still linger. You can imagine him filling in his ticket:

Name in Block Capitals.
VLADIMIR ILYITCH ULIANOV
Name of Author (with initials). Marx, K.

Title and Date of Work.
"Das Kapital" (1867)

Did the librarian who took it ever wonder what it would all lead to? Most unlikely; the librarians in the British Museum Reading-Room are accustomed to people who forget who they are, or where they are, or believe they possess the key of some unfathomable secret, and even if they had known that Lenin was busy working on the October Revolution they would have taken it in their stride.

There are fifteen of them to-day, and between them they have to satisfy seven to ten thousand customers a month, who may take their pick of seven-and-a-half million books. It might have been more, but a quarter of a million were lost by bombing, of which a mere eighty thousand have so far been replaced. And then, of course, there are the newspapers, which have a temple of their own near Hendon.

But before we go behind the scenes, and to get away from mere statistics, let us take a last look at the Room before the decorators get at it. The dome, until the erection of that inverted bowl we call the Dome of Discovery, was the biggest in England and the second in Europe, the Pantheon in Rome beating it by half a yard. At present it is a kind of dun colour, overlaid with a design of squares marking the iron framework within, but when the painters come down from their scaffoldings it will be a rather more distinguished grey.

Below the dome the cylindrical wall is covered with the reference-books which readers may consult without filling in a form. In the middle of the floor is the raised dais where the Superintendent and his minions live, and radiating in all directions are the seats. They are very much of their age, the desks covered in rich but rather worn leather, and provided with elaborate folding book-rests, hooks to lay pens on, and racks below for the convenient stowage of top-hats. The issue of sand for blotting was discontinued in 1838.

When the decorators have finished with them they will present a far gayer aspect, with new coverings of emerald-green leather-cloth and the latest in neon-tube lighting; but readers must wait for these treats until the New Year.

Most of the books are kept in the "ironworks," a vast system of catwalks and passageways lined with book-filled "presses." To get lost in the ironworks would present many of the features of being marooned on a desert island, except that the problem of choosing your six best books would be absent. It is hopeless to try to give any idea of the extent of the book-laden shelves that surround the Reading-Room; but mention should be made of the Arched Room, a beautiful library where the incunabula are kept, together with the books of the kind dealers know as "curious," and of the Copyright Department, where periodicals are stored until they are sent to Colindale, near Hendon.

The difficulties of navigating the collection are, of course, child's play to those who work there. About an hour normally elapses between a reader's handing in his slip and his receipt of his books; but the actual process of finding it will probably not be so long. The slip is put in a little container like those in which drapers used to shoot their bills pneumatically to the cashier. At the far end it is extracted and sent to the appropriate department; the required books are assembled and sent down on an endless-band lift enchantingly called the Paternoster

(though the name derives, disappointingly enough, from that of its manufacturer), then loaded on to a trolley and wheeled into the Room. Thus much of the delay is usually caused by the backlog of work.

The Library boasts its own binding department, too, capable of doing anything from a rich tooled binding for its King's Library (the gift of George IV) to a utility one for prolonging the life of a paperback Flames of Desire, from a cover for a two-inch-high Testament to one for a collection of posters measuring four feet by three.

But now from Bloomsbury let us leap into our Underground train with a ticket for Colindale for a visit to the Newspaper Library.

It is a few yards from the station, a big red-brick building in appearance like a huge modern church. The basic rule is that all periodicals issued more often than once a month are sent there when a year's output has gathered at Bloomsbury, but there are innumerable exceptions on one ground or another: Punch is one, and is kept at the Museum. Among the papers at Colindale are several the public never sees, but which are regularly produced so that the title may be safeguarded. These, even when they print on their single six-square-inch page the same two paragraphs of news every day, are duly bound and placed on record with the rest.

At present two of the main Colindale activities are salvaging bomb-damaged files and micro-filming sound ones. Micro-films will undoubtedly form the library of the future, unless tape-recordings do; as an example of its advantages, a whole volume of Izvestiya, normally filling some two feet by one foot six by three inches, can be photographed in a couple of hours, processed in a couple more, and stored in a cardboard box just under four inches square and an inch and a half thick. The library's own photographic staff, equipped with fifty thousand pounds' worth of equipment bought with a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation, is busy at this task now, and as each volume is finished the original papers are sent even farther away into the country for storage.

Micro-filmed papers, for those who distrust that kind of thing, are read on a machine that enlarges them to more than life-size, if required, and makes them easier to read than the original journal.

The Library has been described by a contemporary as "the most majestic temple of books in the world." Certainly it is doubtful if any other capital can show such riches; but in one of them at least this will cause no heart-burning, for the Kremlin must surely have evidence by now that the collection was founded by Marx and Lenin. As, in fact, its most famous Keeper and the real author of its present greatness was an Italian refugee, who built it up against considerable opposition, we need not be too self-righteous over the matter; but he died Sir Anthony Panizzi, and his bust is over the Reading-Room door. Unless, of course, it has been removed for cleaning.

The Magic Box—Edward and Caroline

I T may seem an ungracious thing to say, but the fact remains that this sums up my feeling about The Magic Box (Director: JOHN BOULTING): it is much better than I expected. Consider the cramping conditions of the specification: a ceremonial work, "the British film industry's principal contribution to the Festival of Britain," a pious tribute to the memory of the man who did so much to make that industry possible, a narrative of events well within the memory of many people now living and, in fact, involving many people now living, and a film, moreover, that makes a point of finding room for "over sixty British stars" to appear in small parts or as extras . . . I would have said the disadvantages were formidable. I expected a dull worthy piece made noticeably artificial and charade-like in detail by the constant appearance of some too-familiar face in a crowd meant to be quite anonymous; instead, what we have is a story that is, to be sure, something less than enthralling, but is far from dull, and uses its wealth of subsidiary talent often to striking advantage. Recognition of a bit-playing star, even if it does not start a flurry of whispers in the audience, inevitably throws the scene off balance for a second; but in most instances this is, in fact, only for a second, after which one may take an honest pleasure in the way the part is played. The character of William Friese-Greene is simplified into that of a man with a consuming passion to which he sacrifices everything and everybody else, and ROBERT DONAT portrays him with convincing earnestness. The script perhaps labours his obsession in the wrong way: surely the man was not under the continual necessity of emphasizing the importance and value of movement in a picture? It seems far more likely that his truly passionate and fascinated interest was in the devices he could use to get it. Again, the need to place the most dramatic scene near the end of the film demands a disconcerting reversal of the order of events: the first flashback shows all sorts of things that really happened years after those shown in the second. But as a whole this is a worthy (in the best sense), interesting picture, good in itself without reference to its merits as a biography.

Edward and Caroline (Director: JACQUES BECKER) contrives to be brilliantly attractive and entertaining with an almost negligible basis of narrative incident. With credible, freshly-observed characters and a continual sparkle of well-imagined, authentic, amusing circumstantial detail, it establishes a lifelike situation between a young husband and wife, and holds our delighted interest in all that concerns them for nearly a hundred minutes. The specks of detail are often amusing precisely because they are authentic: it is as momentarily pleasing to see Caroline wipe the steam from her bathroom mirror as it is, later, to watch the expressions of a group of people listening to music. The young husband (DANIEL GÉLIN) is a pianist; the shifty relations of his wife (ANNE VERNON) give a smart party designed to help his career, and everything goes wrong. The sketches of the people at the party, including a genial American who puts things right at the end, are delightful—but the whole film is delightful. One could see it several times, always with fresh pleasure.

(Dates in brackets refer to Punch reviews)

Apart from La Ronde (16/5/51) there's nothing else very special in London. Anyone in the mood for a spectacular, absurd romp with "scientifiction" might try When Worlds Collide.

Nothing great among the new releases, either. Earlier ones to remember: No Highway (15/8/51) and the two Ealing comedies, The Lavender Hill Mob (11/7/51) and The Man in the White Suit (22/8/51).

THE BELL

IT wasn't till I'd been in my new job for three months that I found time to look at the handing-over notes thoughtfully prepared by my predecessor. These recalled to me with rather a jolt my responsibility for quite a large sum of foreign currency. This was kept in a room at the top of the building, in case officials suddenly had to be sent abroad. Nobody had been abroad since my arrival, and as I'd been fairly busy I hadn't remembered to do anything about it.

I thought I'd better repair my omission, and quickly too.

I found the room without any difficulty and went in. Seated at a trestle table was an elderly, steady sort of chap. He looked as if he'd been there a pretty long time and he gave me a nice feeling of confidence. However, I thought that after a lapse of three months I ought to show him that I was aware of my responsibilities. I told him who I was and asked about the foreign currency.

"Yes, sir," he said. "It's all here, in the safe." And he disclosed a wall safe behind his chair.

"Good," I replied, "where's the key?" He showed me a key on a bunch attached to a chain round his waist. He opened the safe and there was the money, all in neat piles according to the country of origin. I checked it. It was correct to the last peseta. My relief was succeeded by that sensation of virtue that often comes with the knowledge of possessing an entirely trustworthy subordinate. Nothing much to worry about here, I said to myself. Even so, you can't be too careful of other people's money, and I decided to check the security arrangements. He must have guessed what I was thinking, as he pointed to the window and I saw that it was strongly barred. The bars were firm too. By now I was feeling positively snug. I had one more idea.

"That's all very fine," I said, "but what happens if someone comes through the door, biffs you on the head and takes your key and the cash? The door isn't locked, and you're not armed, are you?" "No," he replied, "I'm not armed, but I've got a bell. Here." There it was, by his foot under the table. "It rings in the porter's lodge downstairs." He gave a suspicion of a sigh as if to point out that I might just as well try to test the safety of the Forth Bridge by stamping on it. Well, I'm nothing if I'm not thorough, so I asked him to press it. "Oh, I couldn't do that," he said, and he began to look a trifle obstinate. "It's never been done before, and somebody might get upset. It isn't necessary, sir, really. Everything's quite O.K., as you can see for yourself." I began to feel sorry for him, but once I've started anything I do like to see it through.

"Go on," I said, "press it. I'll take full responsibility if there's any trouble." He sighed again. I felt a bit mean. Then he stepped on the bell. I could hear it tinkle a long way below. We waited, and nothing happened.

"You'd better ring it again," I said a little more confidently. He touched the bell again. It was curious that he seemed to have shrunk.

We heard steps outside and heavy breathing. The door opened and the porter came in. "You're in the dickens of a hurry this morning, George!" he puffed. "What's biting you?" And he banged a bottle of beer down on the table.

We learn with deep regret of the death of Mr. James B. Naismith who, over the initials "J. B. N.", contributed many ingenious verses and articles to these pages between the years 1914 and 1950.

THE SEASON REVIEWED

AFTER our last match on Saturday (Chudleigh 81 for 9 dec., Harris 18, Williamson 15, H. R. Crabtree 7 for 32; Mickley Common 56. Harris 5 for 18, Potts 5 for 31) we conducted our annual review of the season in the "Chudleigh Arms." We agreed unanimously that the high-lights of the summer were as follow:

1. Odd Umpiring in Weston Didsbury Game. Among many strange incidents perhaps the most remarkable was a cry of "One Short!" from the Weston Didsbury umpire at a critical stage of the match. How there could have been "one short" when only one run had been attempted by the batsmen (Numbers 10 and 11) was never satisfactorily explained. The umpire wouldn't talk. His brother, though, who happened to be bowling at the time, ventured the opinion that our No. 10 batsman had been backing-up too boldly. "Must of bin short," he said, "if 'e didn't start from the crease in the first place."

Fortunately we lost by three runs.

"Hurry up, dear, your breakfast cereal's barely audible."

2. Arrival of Oakbury Hill Team in Unusual Vehicle. The morning of July 14 had been showery and the wicket was soft but playable. By three o'clock we had collected two sacks of sawdust from Hubbick's crate-yard, erected the stumps, disposed the four oak benches presented to the club by the Women's Institute, fetched and carried the water for the tea, and fished the tins for the scoreboard out of the locker. At three-thirty we were practising rather listlessly. At three-forty-five somebody suggested that we ought to get Mrs. Marsh to ring up Colonel Chesters at Oakbury and ask him whether he would mind sending his gardener or someone over to Bill Espley's to find out whether our opponents had forgotten all about the fixture or what.

But while we were debating who was to tackle Mrs. Marsh the Oakbury team arrived. In a hearse. It sidled up to the pavilion and eleven players, a scorer, an umpire and two canvas cricket-bags tumbled out. We cheered.

Bill Espley, a man with a strongly developed sense of decorum as well as the finest cover-drive in West Surrey, explained that the vehicle was no longer in use for its original purpose, that it had been converted for general haulage and could be hired very, very cheaply from Parlowe and Stevens.

They beat us by fifteen runs, and when they finally drove off from the "Chudleigh Arms" we raised our hats in silent salute.

3. Mysterious Repetition of "the Hutton Incident." On August 25, in a match against Farncott, an opposing batsman was given out for "Obstructing the field." Winnick, our off-spinner, was bowling at the time, and had six men very close to the wicket in his leg-trap. The Farncott man edged one ball for six between fourth and fifth short-legs and Winnick immediately strengthened his trap by transferring Raddles from point. He ran up to bowl... he bowled... and the batsman swung hard to leg. As he did so he released the bat smartly and it flew just wide of Raddles' left ear.

"Sorry," said the Farncott man, "she slipped."

Off the next ball, however, he repeated the stroke and the bat hit Raddles painfully in the stomach. On an appeal to the umpire the batsman was then given "Out."

The fixture will not be renewed next year.

4. The Tea at Chiffley. This year Chiffley increased the price of their tea to one and ninepence. Village teas, by post-war tradition, consist of two slices of bread and margarine, two triangular sandwiches of tomato and lettuce, a cream cake and two cups of tea. The Chiffley tea, however, is notoriously poor—the sandwiches being of fish-paste and the cake being slab. Fortunately we had been warned what to expect by the Oakbury team, so we carried our own provisions. Chiffley were so indignant that six of our batsmen were given out "l.b.w."

Our view is that if a club wants a new roller it should raise the money from its own village.

5. The Foul-mouthed Motor-Cyclist. The Deepshed game was played throughout in appalling weather. We batted first and Deepshed fielded in a steady drizzle, while we notched fifty-three runs. After tea, when our opponents batted, the skies opened, the rain pelted down and the ground became a sea of mud. But not wishing to show ourselves any less hardy than the men of Deepshed we stuck it out. Soon we were soaked to the skin.

At the height of the storm a motor-cyclist passed the ground. He slowed down, studied us curiously and then shouted "Get inside, you — idiots!" His tone was heavily scornful. Needless to say we continued the game—which we lost eventually by six wickets.

6. Our Victory over Lower Pillsbrook. Scores: Chudleigh 33; Pillsbrook 32. (Note: Pillsbrook played only eight men.)

Yes, it's been a wonderful season, wonderful.

BERNARD HOLLOWOOD

MUSING ABOUT MONEY

Of yore it was thought impolite to mention Money, at least if you had any. Now there is no topic so easily canvassed by even the most flaccid company. Just ask for suggestions for good income tax expenses and stuffed shirts will unbend and, more to the point, bend. Living as I do on the mountain top, far above the sordid strife of marts, I have come rather late to share this interest of my fellow men. So long as some relation was prepared to give me breakfast in bed in return for a promise of having my Epic dedicated to her if I ever wrote it, I bothered little with actual cash. Whimsically I would say "It is not lucre, but goods and services that interest me." Then it occurred to me that this was rather a supercilious attitude, like glorying in not being able to understand Batting Averages, so I decided to become one with the many and buy a share.

It is depressing when one is all brisk and competent and ready to spin money to come up against the great English assumption that ignorance should be courteously ignored. Nobody will tell you what is meant by "Offside" or "Nap" or "Ex-dividend." If you ask, it is taken as a joke in doubtful taste. My encyclopædia, now a little out of date, obviously considers its few paragraphs about the Stock Exchange merely as a bridge between "Stockdove" and "Stockholm." They are written for initiates and to satisfy some vague ideal of completeness. They contain sentences like "When fully paid, stock is rarely quoted at par, but at the market price—e.g. a £1 share would be quoted $1\frac{1}{8}$ to $1\frac{1}{16}$." The example does not clarify my mind. What are these fractions fractions of? Pounds? Shares? Starting price? A sixteenth of a pound is one-and-threepence, an awkward sum corresponding to no coin and rarely met with in ordinary life. A sixteenth of a share seems meaningless in the context. A sixteenth of the starting price would have to be calculated afresh continually, and in the heated atmosphere of Throgmorton Street a stockbroker whose slide-rule jammed would be well on the way to being hammered. Thinking that the fractions might be a code, I have tried to break it with the help of the rules in Poe's The Gold Bug, but so far unsuccessfully. I prefer the encyclopædia when it tells me that persons of Turkish birth are not eligible for membership of the Stock Exchange or that "The tape is the name given to a very ingenious machine found in the majority of brokers' offices."

It is useless to read the financial page of The Times and hope to pick up the threads as you go along. There are long lists of things on sale, from the olde-worlde, like The Funds, to the modernistic, like "Do. 4½% P.F."; but very often only the name of the firm is given. If you intelligently work out that, with all these Exhibitions, cornplasters should do well, you still do not know who makes them. Would it be "Ilford" or "Barr, H'p and G" or "Hector Wh'g"? All these come in the miscellaneous section, yet cornplasters might be a subsidiary activity of a South African Industrial or "Int. Holding."

Even if I knew what to buy, the procedure eludes me. There would be no time to write to the Stock Exchange and request them to forward my order to some firm of repute. The whole business is feverish. Compare the solemn tempo of The Times racing column with the hectic prose of the City notes. To make really large sums I should have to issue my orders by tape machine, an amenity for which there is no room in my flat. There is not room even for a refrigerator, unless we balance it on top of a bookcase. That is one of the disadvantages of cultured living.

My encyclopædia says that stockbrokers are not allowed to advertise and that any who do are likely to be outside the Stock Exchange. It is not quite clear, but I imagine they have to stand about and tug at members as they rush in to get them to place their bets for them. I suppose that I could visit the neighbourhood and try tugging for myself. The difficulty is that one might catch not a broker but a jobber, and these "are supposed to have no outside clients and each confines himself to dealing in certain classes of stocks and shares." Even if you got hold of a kind-hearted jobber who was willing to help, he might be able to get you only something technical, like Foreign Bonds, which would mean hours of reading figures in small print to find whether you had drawn the lucky number, or Treasury Bills, which might make you liable for some of the National Debt. There would also be a danger of never finding your kind rescuer again and being unable to get rid of the investment when it went up.

Assuming that somehow you do actually sign up with a broker, can you decently ask the man to buy you a single share? Is it assumed you deal only in thousands? Obviously, the beginner must start with one and use the profit on that to buy two, and so on. Again, can you decently ask the man to sell it almost as soon as he has bought it? Yet if you keep it too long it might pay a dividend and thus render you liable to income tax. The game must be played at the speed of "Hunt the Slipper" for the policy of small profits and quick returns to work. A busy broker would trip over you if you sat in his office waiting for the exact moment to bid him sell.

As with dog-racing, the only thing to do is to choose what you will back with a pin. With six dogs in a race there is a five-to-one chance against picking a winner. With shares, luckily, any particular share can only go up or down, and the chance is therefore even that you will pick one that goes up. If you go on long enough, by the way, the law of averages will swing things your way; the art is to break off before it turns impartially against you again. A share can go up indefinitely, unless there is any kind of limit put on by the Stock Exchange, as the pools promoters limit prizes. A share cannot go down indefinitely because it cannot very well have a minus value. It must just go out like a candle. A share that hovers just above extinction will not be popular. Many people will just tear it up, rather than pay a stockbroker fees for looking after it. If you hang on, in time it will acquire rarity value, and one might well foster a cult among rich stockbrokers for buying rare shares. In the long run you might do better than if it had originally gone up a sixteenth and you had sold it.

With only these untested beliefs to guide me I shall try to get hold of a share and watch it as closely as an urban Gilbert White. If I make a fortune stockbrokers will begin calling for orders and I can forget all that I have learned about the Money Market. If I lose I shall write an article about the Stock Exchange and, as I could not have written it without investing, I shall claim my losses as an income-tax expense. Heads I win, tails I break even. The Romance of Business is beginning to seize me in its grip.

THE KNIGHT AND THE MAID

THE knight rode slowly to the ford,
All dapple-green the trees above;
And waved he absently his sword,
And dreamed he idly of his love.

While she beside her casement sat
And dreamed of him, upon his horse

(The lily maid of Astolat Did very much the same, of course).

Reflectively he sheathed his glaive,
That homeward knight that tarried still;
And, trotting on across the wave,
Breasted the bank and climbed the hill.

From casement waved the lily
hand,
And nodded out the flimsy veil.
The knight waved back (but his was tanned);
The sun shone bravely on his mail.

"And hast thou many a dragón
alain,
And quench'd in venom'd foam
thy blade?
Or com'st with empty hands again?"
Thus eager quoth the star-eyed maid.

"Nay, never dragon have I bled,
Nor steep'd my blade in venom'd
foam;
I am a feckless knight," he said,
"And empty-handed come I home."

Yet come I home; and there
remark,
Fair damosel, a wondrous thing;
For many a knight stays out by dark,
Alone and palely loitering,

He quests awhile by bush and briar,
And sleeps among the forest trees,
Nor does he even light a fire
To ward the twinges from his knees.

Night after night his lady sits
All uncompanion'd in her tower,
Nor knows she where her champion
flits
Like mail-clad bee from flower to flower.

Rejoice, then, maid, that I appear,
What though it be with empty
hands,
Nor let you languish year by year
While I quest on in foreign lands."

At this the maid was sore amazed;
But, since she fain would have him woo,
His wisdom and his wit she praised,
As wise young maids are wont to do.

PITFALLS AND GINS

HUMAN beings are an inconsistent lot. Novelists and dramatists live by pointing this out, but we never quite believe it can apply to ourselves. Each generation, looking back with disgust at the brutality of its ancestors, likes to imagine itself the first in which civilization has truly flowered. It is a pleasing picture, that the history of social reform unfortunately shows to be moonshine. Through every generation the pattern is persistent: (1) Perfectly decent men practise a cruelty hallowed by tradition—in the last century they sent young children to Botany Bay, and employed chimney boys; (2) after furious opposition the cruelty is prohibited; and (3) those who follow regard with horror the callousness of their forbears, until in their turn their complacency is punctured by still another determined reformer. It is a humbling process, but healthy.

In nothing are we less consistent than in our treatment of animals. Our kindness to them is almost a music-hall joke; and yet between our contented submission to the benevolent tyranny of a particular pet and our habitual disinterest in the mass sufferings of wild animals there lies a gulf so wide that, when we can, we ignore it. Obviously we cannot be held responsible for the ordinary tooth-and-claw savagery which wild animals inflict on one another, but when it comes to cruelties imposed on them unnecessarily by man for his own benefit the score must be chalked up against us. And the case is unanswerable.

More might have been done already to help wild animals, but for the sentimental exaggeration that has coloured too much of the reformers' propaganda. To attribute human sensibilities to rabbits and foxes reduces the argument to a fairy-tale and only irritates potential converts. That the public will pay attention, however, to the claims of humanity when these are strictly scientific has been proved. It has been proved up to the hilt by a small but influential society, UFAW, which bases all its work for animals on an accurate knowledge of the facts.

UFAW is the Universities Federation for Animal Welfare. It began in 1926 as ULAWS, being then confined to London University, but in 1938 its membership was extended, and now there are branches in eight British universities. An extremely distinguished biologist is its President, and the list of Vice-Presidents and Governors contains the names of many eminent scientists and veterinary officers. These are not men to sponsor woolly or romantic abstractions. UFAW exists to find out the facts, which it is well qualified to do; to study the priorities of reform; and to advocate the most practical remedies where they are most needed, helpfully and without heat. Its approach is refreshingly objective. Its outlook is unfanatical (as regards blood sports it co-operates with the Societies controlling sport in promoting humaneness among sportsmen) and it declines controversy. Focusing so much impartial opinion, it is listened to on the highest levels.

Since UFAW is run by scientists, its first test is quantitative. It looks for the largest mass of suffering, and therefore its prime enemy is the steel gin trap, in which in this country millions of animals and birds die in agony each year. Crucifixion is the closest description of their deaths. The photographs collected by UFAW, of victims still alive though horribly mangled, are not sentimental propaganda but facts shameful enough to sear the toughest conscience. Fur-trapping depends largely on the steel gin, and is included in UFAW's campaign, but the chief sufferer is the British rabbit, brutally tortured on a wide scale through commercial exploitation. UFAW has urged, and the Ministry of Agriculture and the National Farmers' Union now agree, that we should be much better off without him, for he damages more food than he produces. The trouble is the small, inefficient farmer, eager to turn his rabbits into cash, who lets his rights to professional trappers; and this commercial exploitation of rabbits vastly increases the rabbit population, as is proved by the story of Carmarthenshire, where there were few rabbits until 1918, when high prices first encouraged trapping, and where rabbit density has since increased enormously in the trapped areas.

That rabbits can be controlled by humane methods, chiefly by gassing, has been demonstrated by UFAW during four years' research in Wales. In the meantime it is going all out, with a formidable body of expert opinion behind it (including the recent Scott-Henderprohibit traps was beaten in the Lords in 1935 by two votes (I shall never forget the swollen attendance of "backwoods" peers, their pockets bulging with home-made snares of the utmost ingenuity). More fortunate was the Bill that became The Prevention of Damage by Rabbits Act, 1939, which discouraged rabbit-farming and obliged trappers to lay gins only at the actual holes.

well-grounded hopes for its future—though it still has to win the usual fight against tradition.

The welfare of laboratory animals, the third main point in its present programme, is an excellent example of UFAW's policy and methods. The vivisection controversy had raged ineffectively for three-quarters of a century, reaching a deadlock in which the immediate welfare of animals seemed to be sometimes forgotten, when UFAW published its "Handbook on the Care and Management of Laboratory Animals." This work at once won its way to favour among biologists, carrying with it a strong plea for attention to the feelings of animals. The scientific press gave it a warm welcome, and now it is a standard textbook in every biological laboratory in Great Britain, and in many abroad.

It seems to me that perhaps the greatest hope for the future of animal welfare lies in UFAW's university student membership, which has expanded rapidly since the war. From among these young men and women will come the best scientists of their generation, and that they should be imbued with humane principles at the start of their careers is too important to need emphasis. Through UFAW they are also learning how to put their principles into practice. A few years ago, when the transport of cattle from Irish farms to Scottish slaughter-houses was often very rough, a party of UFAW student-members from Glasgow Veterinary College volunteered to investigate during their holidays, and delivered a detailed report which contained a number of practical recommendations. That is surely the right spirit of reform.

Then, whales. More than thirty thousand are killed each year, a figure limited by international regulation. Whales are not just useful aggregations of blubber, but extremely sensitive mammals, and at present they are hunted with an explosive harpoon. Except for an occasional lucky hit in the head, this only makes a mess of the whale, which takes, on an average, half an hour to die, towing a three-hundred-ton ship by its wound and bleeding heavily. However innocent and delicious whale-oil products may look, that is their pretty origin. The answer, says UFAW, is the electric harpoon, which kills its victim within a few minutes, saving time which is precious commercially. In consultation with UFAW this new invention has been made and successfully tried out by a senior member of the industry, and there are

THE SISTERS

"MY sister," said my next-door neighbour, Mrs. Arneby, without enthusiasm, "is coming to live here."

Mrs. Arneby and I often chat over the garden fence. She is eighty-three. Her husband died soon after the first World War, and since then she has lived alone and managed her own affairs. Her back is as straight as a guardsman's, and she has never had an illness in her life. To be sure, one of her knees has been troubling her lately—much to her perplexity ("The doctor tells me it's rheumatism. Why should I suddenly get rheumatism? I don't understand it: I've never had such a thing happen to me before")—and she now so far compromises with time as occasionally to walk with a stick.

The longevity of the other members of her household is scarcely less remarkable than her own. Mrs. Atkinson, who comes in twice a week to "do the rough," is a comparatively young person. She has been drawing the old-age pension for only about five years. Horace Blackburn attends to the garden at week-ends. He retired from his job on the railway a quarter of a century ago. And lastly, Kangchenjunga, "the loveliest Peking in the world," has been actively concerned with problems of security for thirteen years. The local renown of this perennially young quartet is a matter of secret, but intense, pride to Mrs. Arneby.

"Her companion has died," she went on, still referring to her sister, "and Emily wants to give up her flat and make her home with me."

"That should be pleasant for both of you," I said.

"I don't know about that. You see"—her voice became earnest and confiding—"she's old. It's a great responsibility having an old person about the house."

"How old is she?" I asked.

"Ninety-one. Mind you, she keeps going very well—too well, in fact. She doesn't realize how foolish it is to behave at her age as if she were ten years younger."

"Still," I urged, "she'll be company for you."

"I don't know," she repeated. "It's a great responsibility, and I'm not sure I like it." And, shaking her head, she returned to her kitchen.

Within a few days the sister, Mrs. Coomber, had arrived. She was taller than, and not quite as erect as, Mrs. Arneby. She had a pair of alert blue eyes which, I learned, needed spectacles only for reading. She looked about seventy. Her sole disability was a slight deafness and, like a good many people with this affliction, she spoke in penetrating tones. I thus could not help overhearing many of their conversations, and becoming aware within a fortnight of Mrs. Coomber's arrival of an unfamiliar note of irascibility in Mrs. Arneby's voice.

The sisters had last lived together in the year 1880, when one was a young woman of twenty and the other a pig-tailed child of twelve; and to Mrs. Coomber the relationship which prevailed then still came naturally.

"Agnes," I heard her say one day, "I hear you suffer from rheumatism."

"I?" said Mrs. Arneby. "Rheumatism? Who on earth told you that?"

"The gardener—what's his name—Blackburn. So—"

"I expect you misunderstood him. The fact is, Emily, if you don't mind my saying so, you're very hard of hearing. Horace was probably telling you about his own ailments. All I suffer from is a slight stiffness in my knee."

"So," persisted Mrs. Coomber, "I told him to cut down all that tangle of weeds over the house."

There was a gasp. "Weeds? D'you mean my wistaria?"

"No, no, dear. Not the wistaria. All this mass of ivy and Virginia creeper. Worst possible thing for the house. Bad for rheumatism too. So damp. How d'you expect to cure yourself if you live in a jungle?"

Mrs. Arneby said furiously "Really, Emily, you go too far. I like to see the house covered with creeper."

"The roof as well?"

"Yes, the roof as well. Please tell Horace not to touch it."

I heard footsteps receding. A door slammed viciously. The next week-end Horace Blackburn was hard at work with shears and bill-hook.

Even more infuriating to Mrs. Arneby than no longer being the mistress of her own house was the wide-eyed incredulity expressed by friends, neighbours, and tradesmen when they were told Mrs. Coomber's age—and Mrs. Coomber, like most ladies over ninety, made no secret of it. To be hale, hearty and able to fend for oneself at eighty-three was a feat; at ninety-one it was almost a miracle. And Mrs. Coomber did more. For presently Mrs. Arneby's cup of bitterness filled to the brim: her knee became suddenly worse, and she could not move from her bed. Mrs. Coomber nursed her.

I knocked on their door as soon as I heard about it, and asked if I could be of any help. Mrs. Coomber, who had just cooked the midday meal, was in the kitchen. She assured me she was managing quite well, and that there was nothing I could do. She was preparing a tray which she was about to take to the invalid.

Suddenly an irritable voice came from the bedroom.

"Who's that, Emily?"

"Mr. Brooks from next door."

The voice changed. "Oh, Mr. Brooks, I'm so glad you've come. Do carry the tray up for my sister. She finds the stairs so trying."

Mrs. Coomber bent over the gas-stove, and removed the lid from a saucepan. "Take no notice, Mr. Brooks," she said, stirring what smelt like an appetizing stew. "Agnes is a little over-wrought."

"What was that, Emily?"

"Nothing, dear. Don't worry so much."

"Oh, how obstinate you are!" exclaimed Mrs. Arneby. "You know it gives me spasms to hear you tottering up the stairs."

Mrs. Coomber made no reply. She filled a bowl with the stew, and set it on the tray.

"I'm terrified you'll fall and hurt yourself," added Mrs. Arneby.

Mrs. Coomber picked up the tray. "Let me remind you, Agnes," she said drily, as she slowly climbed the stairs, "it's not my legs that are rheumatic."

I crept out.

A day or two later, in response to my inquiry, Mrs. Coomber said "Oh, Agnes is getting along all right, thank you. She'll be up by the end of the week." She lowered her voice. "And then I'm going."

"Going?"

"Yes. The fact is, Mr. Brooks," she went on, confidentially, "Agnes is old. When I agreed to come here I hadn't realized that she'd aged so much."

I murmured that I'd always thought her surprisingly youthful.

"Oh, I know she's much younger than I am in years. But years don't matter: it's how you wear them that matters. And I feel that if I stayed here I should soon grow old too. So, directly she's on her feet again, I'm leaving."

Within a week she was gone—to a niece who had a bungalow at Worthing, where, in Mrs. Arneby's opinion, the lack of stairs and the sea air would do her good. I carried her luggage out for her, and as the taxi drove away Mrs. Arneby turned to me and sighed: "Poor Emily. I'd like to have kept her, but I was afraid of trouble. Her heart's very tired, you know."

"She seemed active enough."

"She flogged herself on. Most unwise, I thought. After all, age always has the last word, and there comes a time in everyone's life when the only dignified thing one can do is to admit it."

She turned, and moved towards the house. As she closed the garden gate she looked for a moment at the stick she was carrying. Then she straightened her back (which, after ten days in bed, was a shade off the vertical), slid her hand along the stick until she held it horizontally and, with Kangehenjunga trotting at her heels, walked down the path with a determined, if uneven, tread.

AT THE PLAY

The Man in Possession (EMBASSY)—Variety (PALLADIUM)

IF I sat in a Chair of Drama I should encourage one of my most pertinacious students to burrow among the mysteries of revival. His graphs of the comparative success of a mass of theatrical exhumations, in relation to weight, wit, length of time buried and other factors, should find a place over every manager's desk, and of course the vital curve would be the one showing the optimum moment of revival for different types of play. Many disappointments might be saved by it. I should not be surprised if he found that in the case of social comedy, for instance, forty years, which is long enough for a period crust to form, are safer than twenty, when distance has not yet lent enchantment.

Mr. H. M. HARWOOD's The Man in Possession is a play in point. In 1930, neatly tuned to the taste of the time, it went down well, but where then it shocked entertainingly it now seems thin and a little sordid. In Mr. HENRY OSCAR's new production an attempt is made to cover the rust by giving the date as the present, but this only brings into relief the obsolescence of the heavy father, the young Wodehouse peer and the shaded seduction. The central situation is better than the way it is worked out. A ne'er-do-well disowned by his father goes as broker's man to a bankrupt adventuress engaged to his pompous brother, and having played footman to his visiting family and cleared the decks of various rivals makes off with the lady herself. Although the acting is not remarkable, Miss GRETA GYNT and Mr. HECTOR ROSS lead it with spirit, and in smaller parts Miss DIANA LINCOLN and Mr. DAVID KEIR both stand out, as a Mayfair maid and a pedantic Scots bailiff.

For once undominated by any celluloid giant, the programme at the Palladium last week had real variety. My favourite was that delightful French team, LES COMPAGNONS DE LA CHANSON, nine men with voices as expressive as their miming. Their demonstration of the murder of "Au Clair de la Lune" by different nationalities was neat, but I liked them better in a song outlining the uneventful life-cycle of one Jimmy Brown. Then there was Mr. LESLIE WELCH, whose head looks quite normal on the outside but contains a card-index to such classics as Widsen and Ruff. Ask him the winner of the three-thirty at Kempton on June 4, 1897, and it comes back like that, in the tones of a family butler. Pressed for the wettest racecourse in England, he replied, without hesitation, Putney to Mortlake. Sport appeared to be his province, so we refrained from asking the recipe for a hare à la royale or for the weight of the Forth Bridge in milligrams, but it is hard to imagine this man in defeat.

Miss HAZEL SCOTT, an American whose personality won the audience instantly, beat a piano with great dexterity and extraordinary reserves of stamina, and our Mr. TED RAY was funny, though rather low. As for Miss GIPSY ROSE LEE, she undressed very coyly to some very poor lyrics, and then undressed some more against a shadowgraph. It seemed to me a simple way to earn one's living.

AT THE OPERA

Dido and Aeneas
(MERMAID THEATRE)

missing music of which is supplied from other of PURCELL's works. It was a sure instinct on the part of BERNARD MILES, the producer and owner of the theatre, that made him include it, though it is irrelevant to the main plot and consists mostly of conventional Grecian deities spouting rather second-rate poetry by NAHUM TATE. It prepares the audience for what is to come, just as the orchestral overture, as developed by Gluck, was later to do; so Phœbus with his delightfully absurd chariot and horses, Venus descending on a trapeze and the Nereids and Tritons dancing with Shepherds and Shepherdesses around a Boticelli Spring with a cornucopia of flowers, are not only historically correct but aesthetically satisfying.

LONDON once more possesses an Elizabethan theatre. This new and charming descendant of the famous Globe and Swan of Merrie England is named the Mermaid, and is situated in a garden in St. John's Wood. Those responsible for her installation claim no more than that the Mermaid "is certainly a stage on which Elizabethan actors would have felt at home." Perhaps they are wise to pitch their claim so modestly; for there are some aspects of the playhouses of Elizabethan days which no one would wish to reproduce. A theatre open to the sky, for instance, would not appeal to a present-day playgoer as a place of resort on a December afternoon. The Mermaid of St. John's Wood, however, makes the best of all worlds. There is an Elizabethan apron stage stretching to the centre of the theatre, with a curtained inner stage and a musicians' gallery supported on gaily-painted pillars. There is also a roof painted with golden stars and the signs of the Zodiac; and cushioned benches which were salvaged from the ruins of a bombed Methodist chapel.

There is no doubt that a work such as PURCELL's opera Dido and Aeneas gains tremendously from the intimate atmosphere of a theatre of this kind. In addition, the production at the Mermaid is as gem-like as the theatre itself and KIRSTEN FLAGSTAD, no less, is there in fulfilment of a promise to sing the rôle of Dido.

This is the third production of Dido and Aeneas we have had in London this year, and by far the most enjoyable. It is also the first to include the original Prologue, the

The music is in charge of GERAINT JONES, who conducts from the harpsichord wearing Restoration dress and a full-bottomed wig. Musically the performance is excellent and Madame FLAGSTAD as Dido is truly magnificent. Her singing of "When I am laid in earth" shows with consummate art how grand and poignant is this lovely melody, drooping like a willow under its load of grief. MAGGIE TRYTE as Belinda, EDITH COATES as the Sorceress, POWELL LLOYD as the Sailor and THOMAS HEMSLEY as Aeneas do all that is required of them; while MURRAY DICKIE is a pardonably apprehensive Attendant Spirit, clutching tight the ropes of the trapeze on which he is suspended in mid-air while he melodiously admonishes Aeneas to abandon Dido forthwith.

The production is a joy. The dresses are Grecian, of beautiful materials and glowing colours, Dido herself being arrayed in stately draperies of blue and gold. The small chorus, handled with great skill, takes the active part in the drama that it was intended to do.

Among the many graceful touches which bring the performance so vividly to life is the unpacking of the basket of fruits and wine to regale the royal lovers in the hunting episode, and its hasty repacking as the storm approaches. Another is the stroke of imaginative genius which directed that, after Dido has expired, Cupid looking down from above shall break his bow in two for grief.

The big world outside London will be glad to hear that the Mermaid Theatre is portable, and can be taken down and rebuilt in twenty-four hours. D. C. B.

EIGHTEEN YEARS ELAPSE . . .

"MR. JOHNSON, Dr. Goldsmith, and I supped together at the Mitre . . . He (Johnson) said that Campbell who wrote the Lives of the Admirals is a man of much knowledge and a very good share of imagination; and he told us a diverting enough anecdote, that his wife was a printer's devil (as the cant word is), and when she used to bring him the proof-sheets, he fell in love with her and married her." (Boswell's London Journal. Entry dated July 1 1763.)

"Talking of a very respectable author, he (Johnson) told us of a curious circumstance in his life, which was that he had married a printer's devil." (Boswell's Life of Johnson. Excerpt dated April 20 1781.)

Here is as pretty a literary riddle as ever I heard; which date are we to accept as authentic? Or was Johnson, grown garrulous with age, trying to repeat an old success? Did he suppose that, eighteen years having elapsed since he had last told the story, he might safely tell it again?

I suggest that Johnson was too practised a raconteur to try on any such thing, especially with Boswell listening. There is significance in the absence of any preamble such as "Stop me if you've heard it before," or "Boswell needn't listen, he knows this one." If Boswell had heard it before he would have wanted the others to know it, as any man would. He would have started to chuckle at Johnson's first words, nodding his head and murmuring "Yes, yes, married a printer's devil. I've always laughed at that one, but carry on, Johnson, it may be new to the others."

If, therefore, Johnson told it only once, how are we to explain the choice of dates? The skilled investigator will immediately turn to July 1 1763 in the Life. He will find it tallies with the Journal up to a point. Johnson, Goldsmith and Boswell did indeed sup at the Mitre, and, the name of Dr. John Campbell, "the celebrated political and biographical writer," cropping up, Johnson certainly said very handsomely "Campbell is a man of much knowledge, and has a good share of imagination." But there is no mention, even a passing one, of wives or printers' devils.

Some critics will maintain that Boswell, polishing and revising his Journal many years afterwards, borrowed the story from the Life to enliven a dull passage, and was compelled to enter it under a spurious date, the Journal, of course, ending in 1763. Others will argue that Boswell, slogging away at the Life with the Journal at his elbow, forgot to enter the incident at the proper time, and had to work it in later. Surely, however, he could have found an apt occasion earlier than one eighteen years ahead (a dinner at Mrs. Garrick's)?

Let us examine April 20 1781 in the Life more closely. Does the paragraph fit snugly into the context, or does it strike us as an intruder? Boswell reports with obvious veracity that "The Bishop of Killaloe kept his countenance with perfect steadiness, while Miss Hannah More slyly hid her face behind a lady's back who sat on the same settee with her." Whatever the true date, it seems pretty clear the Bishop and Miss More were there at the time, and Boswell does not mention their presence at the Mitre supper-party in 1763.

They may have asked him not to let anyone know they were there—it would have caused unpleasant talk in the see of Killaloe, and it might have led to pupils being removed from the boarding-school the More sisters ran at Bristol—but Hannah More at least was never much of a one for pubs. I think it unlikely you would ever have found her at the Mitre, even if the Bishop of Killaloe had taken her there. Anyway, she was only eighteen at the time, and the Mitre would probably have hesitated to serve her.

The investigator may well pause baffled. I must draw his attention to a curious point that may have escaped him. At Mrs. Garrick's, Johnson, doubtless from delicacy—the subjects of the anecdote may have been present—does not actually name the "very respectable author" who married a printer's devil. We only assume it to be the Campbell of whom he had gossiped so freely that long-ago night at the Mitre. But why should Campbell have been alone in marrying a printer's devil? Authors and printer's devils were much thrown together in those days, and what more likely than that some very respectable author, a warm admirer of Campbell's and fired by his master's example, should also have married one?

This, surely, is the definitive explanation. Johnson was not repeating himself—he was telling another story altogether. Boswell, sound craftsman that he was, knew what the critics would say if he included two such similar episodes in the Life, and he reluctantly cut the first one out of the Mitre scene, which was running over-length anyway. He consoled himself by using it up in his Journal.

The identity of the second author to marry a printer's devil we probably shall never know. It will remain one of the great literary mysteries of the eighteenth century.

O those dramas of greed and garrotting!
O those tangles of glamour and guile!
O the hours (when I should have been swotting)
That I spent in the thrall of that smile!

How I basked—through two "showings" (consecutive)—

In its sweetness, seduction and sin!
Which is why I am now an Executive
When I ought to have been in Admin.

THE modern biographer, unlike his predecessors, is expected to show both what his subject was and what he did, and to relate the two. He has to be something of an historian and something of a psychologist, thus uniting two rather different types of mind. It is cheering to find how often the modern biographer does succeed in this. To-day biography is the most consistently successful department of literature, though not the easiest.

Miss Ione Leigh's Castlereagh has a subject who impressed his contemporaries by his glacial command of himself and of Europe, yet who ended by committing suicide—a subject, that is to say, whose life touches both diplomatic history and psychiatry. Miss Leigh has had access to some unpublished material in the Londonderry family archives and she has read a good many of the authorities; but she is not concerned so much to increase knowledge as to diffuse it. Her biography is aimed at the general reader, not the specialist, and it will give him a clear and readable outline. She tries hard to be fair; but her evident sympathies with Castlereagh make the hatred which he aroused seem inexplicable. Yet the public instinct saw in him the champion of reaction, and by comparing the political atmosphere of the seventeen-eighties with that of the eighteen-tens we can see how far the reaction had gone. The breakdown of the Treaty of Versailles, based on the principles of nationalism, used to give a nostalgic lustre to the Treaty of Vienna; but even though Castlereagh dissociated England from the Holy Alliance, he supported at home a policy not much different from that pursued by the Tsar and Metternich abroad. Miss Leigh's treatment of his final breakdown makes too much of the distinction between private and public life. The form taken by his delusions could, perhaps, have been more closely related to the political action that preceded them.

Miss D. M. Stuart's Daughter of England is a life of Princess Charlotte that brings into general circulation the new material published by Professor Aspinall and others. It is a learned, racy, sensible book that makes Charlotte less of a sensitive pawn than Professor Renier did. She was a hoyden of character, with a good deal of both her father and her mother. The grotesque background of the Court is described with some vivid detail and both Charlotte's character and her political importance come through clearly. There is an interesting medical appendix on her death.

Mr. Julian Symonds' little book on Charles Dickens, in The English Novelists Series, holds the balance well between the extreme psychologizing of much modern Dickens criticism and the school whose main interest in him is sociological. Mr. Symonds is a sensible writer and recognizes that the most important thing about an artist is his work. He is very good on the part played by plot in the mechanics of Dickens' writing, so often ignored by critics and over-emphasized by the films, which tend to treat him as the Lambs treated Shakespeare. Like many modern readers, Mr. Symonds is out of sympathy with Dickens' humour, though at least he recognizes its existence. The neurotic element in it does not prevent its being funny, even if it is, like the Ingoldsby Legends at a different level, funny in a disturbing way. For some reason he quite mistakenly assumes that what he has to say will appeal mainly to readers under forty.

A new issue of the late Charles Williams' James I, with an introduction by Miss Dorothy Sayers, makes an interesting contrast with these other biographies. It is rather a biographical composition than a biography; the writer is a participant, throwing the illumination of an individual mind on the familiar. Though he traces the main steps of James' career, his real theme is the meeting of the Temporal and the Eternal in the leading British exponent of the Divine Right of Kings. Hence, it does not much matter that the bibliography is short and contains little that is recent. The narrative is swift and exciting, the comment rather tortured and elaborate. The chief weakness of the book is straining for effect. The style is sometimes gnomic and witty, sometimes so slovenly as to be unintelligible. Though the book will not suit historians or examination candidates, I can commend it to the "Common Reader," provided that he does not mind being occasionally infuriated in return for many flashes of insight and some thrilling episodes.

Collector's Titbit

Robert Bage was a Quaker paper-manufacturer of Staffordshire who died in 1801, having produced late in life six novels which won the praise of Walter Scott. The best of these is said to be Hermesprong, Or Man As He Is Not, now republished with an introduction by Mr. Vaughan Wilkins. It is an oddity that will certainly please those who like satire, and like it dry. Bage, who had evidently taken the French Revolution to heart, was an independent spirit much in advance of his time, and in Hermesprong he lashed its snobbery and love of privilege. The plot is very near to a Victorian melodrama. There is a horrid peer who maltreats his lovely daughter, and an arrogant parson who abets him; both are brought satisfactorily low by a mysterious American who believes in strange heresies, such as the equality of women. But there is little Victorian about the writing, which is witty, detached, and agreeably malicious.

Underground Movement

The technique of resistance invented by the English Catholics in their Elizabethan underworld has never been more happily, vividly and heroically exemplified than in the autobiography of John Gerard, which has just been delightfully re-translated and edited by Father Philip Caraman. Mr. Graham Greene's discerning Introduction points out how far we have receded from the Victorian heyday into an age not unlike Father Gerard's own, "the last era of a declining and gasping world." And the upheavals of the seminary priest's adventurous environment of 1564-1606 are the facsimile of a paratrooper's in an occupied country—apart from their spiritual motives and consequences. Rowed secretly ashore near Cromer, Father Gerard played the country gentleman—which by birth he was—and shepherded his scattered flock all over England. He was tortured, but escaped from the Tower; hiding-places and hairbreadth escapes were his customary portion. His innumerable converts included Penelope Rich, Walsingham's only child, who was Sidney's widow and Essex's. And he out-weathered his perils and died in Rome.

Turkey at the Crossroads

No modern dictator better served his country than did Mustafa Kemal, whom Turks for generations to come will admiringly remember as Atatürk—"Father of the Turks." If Turkey now stands at the Turkish Crossroads largely foreseen by Atatürk, it is because her present dilemma arises out of her geographical situation rather than out of her political and economic condition. Mr. Bernard Newman travelled widely and discerningly throughout Turkey, and describes what he saw of life on that ancient highway between West and East with a practised pen and a keen eye for picturesque or humorous happenings. He does not ignore the harsher aspects of Turkish life—life can be grim indeed for many Turks—and sympathetically explains the economic and political background to the Turkish problem. Which way will Turkey now turn? East or West? Mr. Newman is confident she will be "a worthy partner with the democracies of the West."

Merchantmen under Arms

Both in peace and war the P. and O. service has inherited much of the tradition of the old East India-man, a particular attention to those matters of seaman-like detail indicated by the phrase "Blackwall fashion," a respect for ceremony not to be found in most merchant vessels (as exemplified in the unwritten law which required the company assembled for dinner to rise when the Commander entered and remain standing until he was seated), and, last but not least, an ability to rise to the occasion in time of war, as in the days

"Do hurry with your sketching, Roger.
I think we're attracting attention."

when Sir Nathaniel Dance gained a knighthood and a sword of honour for his successful action with Linois' formidable French squadron. Mr. George F. Kerr, in Business in Great Waters, a record of the P. and O. fleet from 1939 to 1945, displays to the full the continuance of the Dance tradition, ranging as it does from the "Rawalpindi," sinking with her last gun firing after hopelessly engaging a far superior opponent, to the little coaster "Redcar," which rendered yeoman service at the Normandy beach-heads, and survived to be the first Allied merchant ship to enter the port of Antwerp. The exploits and the fate of the small cargo ships passed for the most part unnoted in the press of great events and the secrecy of modern war. What those who served in them endured may be learned from the account Mr. Kerr gives in the chapter "Abandon Ship" of the sufferings of the survivors of the "Soudan," "Shillong" and "Nagpore."

Senlin Walks Again

Senlin, tying his tie before a mirror in the presence of the universe, is still Conrad Aiken's inspiration. Skylight One, like earlier collections of Mr. Aiken's poems, draws much of its effect from blending the intimate and the immense. Yet one gets no sense of mere clever jugglery with words; "the cicada's little helicopter" and "morning . . . blue as a child's globe on which no map has been drawn" seem to spring naturally and spontaneously from the poet's thought and the normal flow of what he has to communicate. Born in Georgia, holding the chair of poetry at the Library of Congress, now resident on Cape Cod, Mr. Aiken makes his flights from a secure continental base; he knows that he comes from somewhere and has somewhere to return to; this gives to his rich imagery and delicate fancy a fundamental certainty and solidity; it reassures one that a lost soul is not requisite for either writing or appreciating contemporary poetry.

HH

No Man will be a Sailor . . .

Every man thinks meanly of himself, Dr. Johnson told us, for not having been at sea; for which reason alone a story about the Royal Naval College, Dartmouth, has an advantage over the ordinary school story.

BOY DANCE

Moreover, ordinary school stories, serious ones anyway, are commonly the febrile first-fruits of precocious talents, whereas John Lodwick's The Cradle of Neptune is a mature novel, primed with humanity and wit and informed throughout with a deep affection for Naval tradition and understanding of what it means. His hero, the intractable Cadet Roffey, so vividly presented in his determination, at whatever cost, to avoid continuing in the Navy, commands an actual personal sympathy that is almost painful; indeed, all the characters—boys, officers and masters—are drawn with singular realism and insight into their several problems. This is a book for everyone who is interested in the Royal Navy, or in boys, or simply in a very good novel.

Gracious Living

Southill: A Regency House is a beautifully-printed quarto with ninety plates which allow effective study of detail. Samuel Whitbread, founder of the famous brewing dynasty, bought the house from the Byng family in 1795, dying the next year. His son, brilliant exemplar of the new middle-class "aristocracy," wealthy and cultured, employed Henry Holland to re-plan the house and control the furnishing and decoration—thus giving it a unity which is as rare as it is aesthetically satisfying. Rarer still the resolute refusal of the family to make changes to accord with trends and fads of fashion; so that we have a museum piece—if that term be not understood to exclude the warmth of gracious living—from a peak period of architectural achievement. Professor Richardson's essay on the building plan and detail and on Holland's artistic origins, sources of inspiration and constructive ability is solid instruction on the noblest of the practical arts. Mr. J. F. B. Watson's documented account of the furniture and decoration is equally valuable.

BI-LATERAL TALKS

HIS ignorance of English was equalled by my innocence of French. His determination to understand the English character was matched by my resolution that he should not go unenlightened.

In his hand he held a copy of an English magazine. He showed it to me, en faisant mine of inquiry.

"Pinsh—quoi?" he suggested.

"Mais non," I replied. "Punch."

"Pernsch!"

"Coup de poing," I explained, throwing myself into a posture of defence, et faisant mine de boxe.

He made the air startled but resolute.

"C'est plein de jests," I went on, "de blagues, de l'humeur, de l'esprit, de bons mots, des illustrations très, très amusantes—"

"Done alors," he said, with the air uncomprehending.

"Écoutez done," I said, launching myself upon unknown seas, "voici un jest de Coup de Poing. Il y a une fois un curé—you know, curate!"

He nodded intelligently.

"Ce curé avait un œuf. Chez son bishop, vous comprenez?"

"Bishop?"

"Un bishop—un clerc de la plus haute importance. Comme en le jeu de chess."

"Shess?"

"Un jeu pour deux—" a horrid pitfall yawned before me. I skirted it, and said firmly: "Alors. Le bishop dit au curé: M'sieur Jones, je pense que vous avez un œuf mal? Mais non, je vous assure, monseigneur, dit le curé, quelques parts de mon œuf sont excellents."

After a painful silence, he said: "Pourquoi—le curé—he say this?"

"Parceque," I said, "parcequ'il est chez son bishop."

"The egg of this bishop, he is not bad, no?"

"Oh, yes," I said, "he's bad. Il est mal, all right."

It was apparent that this hitherto unsuspected leaning of the Anglican clergy towards deceit was shocking him. Moreover, he clearly regarded me as a rabid anti-clericalist.

"Mais—le curé—he say, not at all bad?"

"Not all bad."

He brushed this aside as a piece of unworthy casuistry.

"Not bad. Mais—the egg—he is bad. No?"

"Le curé," I explained, "avait l'espoir d'un morceau de préférence, n'est ce pas? Et il ne desirait pas enragier son bishop."

There is no doubt that Trollope should be required reading in French schools.

The ethics of the matter were plainly more important than its comic possibilities.

"So," he said severely, "this. It is to laugh?"

"Rire," I said. "Yes. Oui."

He saw no cause for levity in these abominable revelations. However, after a pause, he said:

"Nous autres français, we have also the books to laugh. You read Le Canard Enchaîné?"

"I've heard of it," I said. "The Duck in Chains."

"Mais non!" he cried, his eyes glittering with the lust to impart knowledge. "Mais non! Pas du tout!"

It was his turn.

"Expliquez-moi, je vous en prie," I said, resignedly.

After all, what is the Entente for, if not to ensure a proper spirit of give and take?

JOURNEY BY BUS

THE woman considered the plan of campaign. "I don't think we'll wait for a fifteen. We'll get a five. We can get off at the town hall, and get another one on from there."

"All right," the man said.

The woman reflected. "I don't know, though. It's a nuisance changing. And the fifteen takes you all the way."

The man agreed. "A fifteen would be better."

The woman elaborated. "Or a three would take us as far as the town hall."

"Yes."

"And if we walked along to the bottom of George Street we could pick up a four."

The man acknowledged "We could."

"It doesn't have to be to the town hall. We could get a si-to the station, and get off at the clock tower."

"Or a nineteen."

"Or," the woman propounded, "a one. We could go as far as the electric showrooms, then a trolley bus."

"Yes, that's another thing we could do."

"That's a thirty-eight," the woman specified for good measure, and added "or a forty-two. Of course, there's something else you've got to think of," she continued. "That's the fare. They don't do a return to the town hall."

"Nor to the clock tower."

"Nor to the electric showrooms." She introduced an additional complication. "And there's coming home."

"Coming home." The man made a mental note of the difficulty.

"You know what it is," the woman explained, "late at night."

If he did not, the man pretended that he did.

"Well that's that, then," the woman completed the appreciation. "We'll get a return on the fifteen, and no changing coming home."

The man welcomed the final solution of the problem. "Well, that's settled then," he concluded. "A fifteen."

"It was a fifteen, if you remember," the woman reminded him, "that I said first of all, when we decided to go."

SAY "Noilly Prat"

and your 'French' will be perfect!

Because... Today, like a hundred and fifty years ago, Noilly Prat Vermouth is still made only in France, from French grapes by master blenders in the traditional French way. Because it is real 'French', the Vermouth that marries so well with gin, that gives subtlety to any cocktail that calls for a 'French' accent.

Remember, too, that Noilly Prat is full strength, that's why it makes an intriguing aperitif on its own, either neat, or with a splash. Try it.

Men Only?

EVENING ENGAGEMENTS take a variety of forms. Sometimes there is a rainbow of charming colours and a cascade of charming conversation: there are ladies present. At other times the sombre black and white of broadcloth and starched linen dominate the scene, and the talk is of mature and weighty matters: it is a 'stag' affair. Both sorts of occasion are equally important. Both, at the Connaught Rooms, are equally superbly done. In the Connaught Rooms, where no fewer than twenty of the most sumptuous Banqueting Halls are gathered together under one roof, London has an amenity without equal anywhere on earth.

NOW is the time to solve the problem of your future. With a PEARL PENSION ASSURANCE you can provide yourself with a regular income or a lump sum to suit your personal needs. For instance—£450 a year or £5,000 in cash plus guaranteed bonuses, at age 65. (For women the income would be slightly smaller.) In the event of your earlier death, a capital sum of £5,000 plus accrued guaranteed bonuses would be payable at once to your dependants. Premium payments rank for income-tax abatement. Send in the Enquiry Form to-day for full details.

The inflexible rule of the surgeon and of the nurses who assist him is that nothing, nothing whatsoever, must be left to chance. In almost all our great hospitals and clinics today 'Dettol' is the chosen weapon of defence against the risks of septic infection. Learn from the hospital, learn from the clinic, and whenever infection threatens in your own home, use 'Dettol' promptly.

What can be done with a brainwave?

You've had brainwaves all your life, actual electrical activity in your head which you have probably known nothing about. But neurologists can tell a great deal about your mental state by studying this activity with the aid of electroencephalographs (taking it more easily, electroencephalo-graphs, commonly known as E.E.G.'s) which magnify the minute currents 3 million times. These instruments are made by Ediswan. Electrocardiographs for recording heartbeats, X-ray and other electro-medical equipment are made by Newton Victor. Better and more restful lighting is provided by B.T.H., Ediswan and Metrovick — in fact the companies forming A.E.I. are constantly contributing to the health and comfort of the British people.

What are they talking about?

International Matches

No, they're not talking about the last putt. They're talking about Burrough's Gin. People who really understand, and really think about their gin drinks, always prefer Burrough's, because it is triple distilled. This extra refinement makes it soft, smooth and perfectly clean to the palate.

Delicious taken plain, Burrough's Gin also "keeps its place" in even the most delicate cocktails. Price 33/9 per bottle; 17/7 per half-bottle.

YOU DONT HAVE TO GO TO SEA TO BE A PIRATE

Pussy discovered this when, seeing the larder door left open, she sneaked in, jumped on a shelf and helped herself. Being artful and unhampered by scruples she warily waited and watched for other chances. They came—fairly regularly. This convinced her that larder-raiding was very rewarding. This piracy, however, is a thing of the past. Pussy waits in vain. The

Behind the Cables—the Company

With the exception of our cross-channel and coastal routes, the maintenance and development of the whole of Britain's incoming and outgoing cable system is the responsibility of the Company. They own 155,000 nautical miles of submarine cable, which connect the lands of the Commonwealth with each other and with the outside world. They operate the external telecommunications of most Crown Colonies and of several foreign countries where they hold concessions. The Company are in fact the largest undertaking of their kind in the world, and the only one to operate an integrated system of cable and wireless circuits beyond the confines of Europe.

KEY TO PHOTOGRAPHS—1. Deck machinery drawing a length of cable aboard a cableship. 2. A ship's officer plotting the position of a cableship. 3. A telegraph operator transmitting a message.

IDLE MACHINES, avoidable fatigue and accidents are part of the real cost of out-of-date handling. It tends to make its mark in the balance sheet when goods are humped and hoisted about by hand.

WHAT A DIFFERENCE when lifting and shifting are organized, part of a smooth production flow! Nearly always it means more production, less effort, lower cost per unit.

HERE'S EFFORTLESS POWER to do your lifting and shifting. One man and a My-Te-Min can free two other workers for production jobs. These Electric Pulley Blocks soon repay their cost (from £65 upwards). Running costs are negligible. Maximum loads range from 400-3600 lbs. Other blocks available up to 10 tons. For a My-Te-Min or full-scale handling installation consult KING.

The letter above—signed by the managing director of a West Country firm—very forcefully gets to the heart of the matter where steam traps are concerned. The effective life of a trap can be discovered in one way only—in working practice—not on the test bench, nor from what the makers may claim. We, for example, give a 2-years' unconditional guarantee with every Drayton-Armstrong. This in no way represents its trouble-free life. Thousands have been in use for ten years and more and are still operating with complete efficiency without having cost a penny for maintenance. Drayton-Armstrong Traps are available either with vertical or with horizontal connections. This simplifies installation, with the minimum of fittings and labour. The Drayton book on steam trapping explains why. It tells you all about trapping, how to choose the right trap for the application and is well worth writing for.
